DISAPPOINTMENT BECOMES JOY – BILLY GRAHAM DEVOTION

They shall see his face ... Revelation 22:4 (TLB)

One of the great bonuses of being a Christian is the great hope that extends beyond the grave into the glory of God's tomorrow. A little girl was running toward a cemetery as the darkness of evening began to fall. She passed a friend who asked her if she was not afraid to go through the graveyard at night. "Oh, no," she said, "I'm not afraid. My home is just on the other side!" We Christians are not afraid of the night of death because our heavenly home is "just on the other side." The resurrection of Christ changed the midnight of bereavement into a sunrise of reunion; it changed the midnight of disappointment into a sunrise of joy; it changed the midnight of fear to a sunrise of peace. Today faith and confidence in the resurrected Christ can change your fear to hope and your disappointment to joy.

Prayer: Whatever I fear the most, Lord Jesus, I put into Your loving hands, knowing You will give me peace and courage.

ISRAEL PREPARES FOR 2000TH ANNIVERSARY OF JESUS' BAPTISM IN 2030

The Foreign Ministry announced that it is preparing for the 2,000th anniversary of Jesus' baptism in 2030. The anniversary as "a milestone of profound spiritual significance for more than two billion Christians worldwide."

While Israel's Jordan River baptism sites attract thousands of Christian pilgrims each year, the initiative appears to mark a broader effort. The Jordan has already begun a series of improvements and preparations for the 2030 anniversary on its side of the traditional baptism site.

Earlier this year, King Abdullah II hosted a meeting of leaders from the Catholic and Orthodox churches, at the site traditionally known as Al-Maghtas, which sits directly opposite the Israeli site, known today as Qasr el-Yahud. At the meeting, King Abdullah announced that Jordan will support and oversee preparations for the 2030 jubilee celebration, which will include infrastructure improvements and expanded services for pilgrims.

The baptism of Christ is not merely a historical memory but an eternal event that continues to speak to every believer.

Jordanian authorities have insisted their infrastructure improvements will respect the sacred nature of the site. This is the site where Jesus got his calling and so it would be highly inappropriate to corrupt it or violate in any way."

It is not yet clear what preparations the Israeli government is planning for the site on the western side of the Jordan River. The site has only been open for about 15 years. Qasr el-Yahud, which means "Castle of the Jews" in Arabic, a likely reference to the site of the crossing of the Jordan River by Israelites, was only opened for pilgrims in 2011, after an extensive demining effort by the Israeli government, which was later joined by the HALO Trust, an international demining organization. The mines had been placed during the conflict between Israel and Jordan during the 1967 Six Day War.

The Israeli government is hoping that the significant anniversary of Jesus' baptism, expected to draw millions of Christian pilgrims to the region, will provide an opportunity to improve ties with the traditional Christian denominations, especially the Catholic and Orthodox churches.

Israel will continue to safeguard freedom of worship and access to holy sites for members of all faiths.

PRAY ABOUT EVERYTHING. WORRY ABOUT NOTHING

"Be anxious for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known to God; and the peace of God, which surpasses all understanding, will guard your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." Philipians 4:6-7

Worry is a form of prayer. Just not to God. When you worry, you are rehearsing a scenario, going over it, dwelling on it, turning it over and over in your mind, giving it your sustained attention and emotional energy. It is, in a sense, a meditation. A prolonged act of focus on something that frightens you.

The problem is not the attention. The problem is the direction.

Paul says: be anxious for nothing. And the prescription he gives is not to think better thoughts or adopt a more optimistic outlook or remind yourself of statistics. He says pray. Specifically, about everything. Every single thing you are tempted to worry about is something you are invited to bring to God instead.

Not eventually. Now. In this moment, about this thing.

The verse that follows is one of the most beautiful promises in the New Testament, and it is the direct result of doing what verse 6 says. When you pray, the peace of God, which surpasses all understanding, will guard your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. The word guard is a military term. It means to stand watch, to post a sentinel, to keep something from being overrun.

God's peace is not just a feeling that comes over you when you pray. It is a guard that is posted at the door of your heart and mind, keeping the anxiety from getting back in after you've given it to God.

But here is the sequence that matters: the guard only shows up when you pray. The exchange only happens when you make the trade, your worry for His peace. You cannot receive what you are not releasing.

Think about what you are currently carrying. The situation at work that you keep rehearsing in your mind. The relationship that is unresolved. The financial pressure that wakes you up at 3 a.m. The health concern you are trying not to think about too hard. The child you are watching make choices you can't control.

All of it. Every single item on that list. Paul says: bring it to God. Right now. In short, honest, specific prayers, not because God doesn't already know, but because the act of bringing it shifts something in you. You stop being the one carrying it alone, and you start being the one who has handed it to Someone capable of actually doing something about it.

Worry assumes you are responsible for the outcome.

Prayer acknowledges that you are not.

Jesus said it differently: which of you by worrying can add a single hour to his life? Worry is not just uncomfortable. It is useless. It does not solve problems. It does not change outcomes. It only depletes the person doing it.

Prayer does something worry never can. It connects you to the One who holds the outcome. And He trades your anxiety for a peace that doesn't make logical sense, a peace that stands guard even when the circumstances haven't changed yet.

That is the exchange He is offering you today.

You don't need to pray for a long time. You don't need to find the right words. You need to be honest about what you're carrying and hand it over. Short. Specific. Right now.

Stop worrying. Start praying. The guard is waiting to be posted.

REFLECTION - Write down the top three things you have been worrying about this week. Then, one at a time, pray each one in a single honest sentence and physically cross it off the list as an act of faith, declaring that you have handed it to God and are receiving His peace

PRAYER - Lord, I have been carrying things that were never mine to carry. I have been worrying about outcomes that are in Your hands, not mine. Today I am making the trade. I bring You my anxiety, all of it, specifically and honestly, and I receive Your peace in return. Guard my heart and mind today. I trust You with everything on the list. Amen.
