HAPPY BIRTHDAY

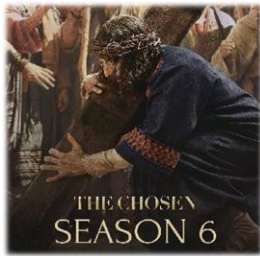

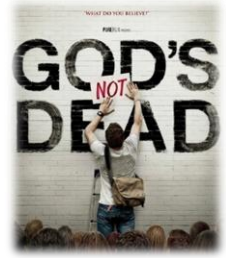

Stacy Metz – October 14

HAPPY ANNIVERSARY

Seith & Heather Sawyer – October 21

MOVIE NIGHT - NEXT SUNDAY OCTOBER 25TH 6PM

We plan to show another one of the last 3 God's Not Dead movies. With it being election time in November we are going to show one that encourages us to support our rights and use our voice. The church has been too silent in the past, and we are fighting giants that should have never been allowed in previous generations to advance.

THE CHOSEN – COMING SOON...

The church has been invited to show “The Chosen” season six episode 1 early access, before it is released to Prime Video.

We are working out the details and may consider Sunday Evening November 1st.

THE POWER OF PRESENCE

Train up a child in the way he should go; even when he is old he will not depart from it. - Proverbs 22:6

Zacchaeus climbed up into the branches of a sycamore tree simply hoping to catch a distant glimpse of Jesus as He passed through Jericho. He expected to remain anonymous, watching from the safety of the leaves while the crowd surged below. Instead, Jesus walked right up to the base of that tree, looked up, called him by name, and told him He was coming to his house today. In that single, unhurried moment, the Savior stopped the entire journey to offer His focused, undivided presence to a man who felt entirely invisible.

We see this ultimate pattern of presence woven throughout Scripture. God did not remain distant from His people; He chose to dwell among them. In the New Testament, that physical nearness reached its peak when Jesus came and pitched His tent among humanity, walking dusty roads, sitting closely with ordinary people, and offering His undivided attention to the broken and the weary.

That same intentional availability is what we are called to model inside our own homes. In a world driven by constant busyness and endless demands, it is easy to be physically present while our minds are miles away. We can provide for every material need yet starve our families of the one thing they crave most: our actual, focused attention.

Moving past mere busyness to offer the gift of undivided attention requires a deliberate slowing down. Children and those we love do not remember every task we completed or every item we bought. They remember who sat down, looked them in the eye, and listened without distraction.

Seizing everyday, ordinary moments to impart wisdom and unconditional love transforms ordinary routines into sacred spaces. When we talk together at the kitchen table, ride in silence in the car, or simply pause to listen at the end of a long day, we echo the faithful presence of a God who meets us in our routine moments.

Showing up consistently in the lives of those who matter most is a quiet act of worship. Just as our heavenly Father is constant, steady, and unshakeable in His availability to us, we are called to anchor our families through our steady, reliable presence.

When we choose to show up, lay down the distractions, and offer our hearts fully, we build a legacy of love that outlasts every temporary pursuit.

Prayer: Lord, thank You for Your faithful, unfailing presence in our lives. Forgive us for letting busyness crowd out the people who matter most. Give us the grace to slow down, the intentionality to offer our undivided attention, and the heart to show up consistently for our families. Let our presence reflect Your unfailing love today. Amen.*

QB SAYS GOD'S AT CENTER OF TEAM: 'THAT'S WHO I AM'

Dallas Cowboys quarterback Dak Prescott said faith is at the core of his team's culture. He told reporters he and his teammates know "we're all here because of God." Prescott, 33, said he and his fellow players are "all here to serve a greater purpose."

The athlete credited Cowboys head coach Brian Schottenheimer with establishing a faith-filled culture on the team. "I've been through so much in my life," said Prescott. "God's always been the reason and, yeah, who I fall back on and my refuge, as I say. I can't thank Him enough and never will be able to thank Him enough and just to see that transcend throughout our team, starting with our head coach, is special. It's something that we take pride in."

It's clear Schottenheimer has embraced a celebration of faith on the team — both behind the scenes and in front of the cameras.

Cowboys cornerback Ameer Speed's mother prayed over her son right before the team's game against the Texans. In a clip of the powerful moment, Aricka Spencer is seen leaning over the railing in the stadium and placing her hand on Speed's head as she held his hand and prayed for him.

Prescott gave reporters a window into why he and his teammates are so open about their trust in God. He said the players are seeking to "be contagious" in their bold expressions of faith.

The motivation, he said, is about “opening your perspective up when things happen, win, lose or draw,” and asking God what His “purpose” is for wherever He’s placed you in life.

“We know what God wants us to do in our response and that’s being the best versions of ourselves, serving Him, serving others,” Prescott explained. He continued, “We may not always have the answers for it, but we know what God wants us to do in our response, and that’s be the best versions of ourselves, serving Him, serving others and doing it with just pure love. I’m thankful for this team.”

Prescott also credited Jonathan and Dr. Tony Evans, both of whom serve as chaplains for the Dallas team.

MILLIONS OF CHRISTIANS DON'T VOTE

CHRISTIAN GROUP REMINDS PEOPLE OF FAITH WHAT'S AT STAKE

Election Day is Tuesday, November 3rd. Issues important to Christians are on the ballot, yet many may choose to stay home. Statistics show an estimated 40 million Christians sit out elections. Concerned Women for America is hoping to reduce that number. CWA President and CEO Penny Nance told CBN News if believers would vote their values, America would be more closely aligned with Biblical principles. "If we would all actually show up, do our civic duty and vote, we could swing an election any way we wanted," she said.

Concerned Women for America launched its "She Prays, She Votes" Bus Tour which stops in 9 states from now until Election Day. The goal is to motivate Christians, an underrepresented voting block, to head to the polls. Nance said if people need to register to vote or are unsure about whether they are already registered, they can visit ChristianVotes.org.

"The Senate is up for grabs coming this election and the Senate confirms judges," Nance said. "So who we have, if there's a Supreme Court opening or any of the lower appellate court positions that are open and there's several that are open, are confirmed by the Senate. So if we want to confirm righteous judges, Deborah-type judges, then we have to have a government who understands what we're looking for."

So we've got to just make people aware of what is on their ballot come Election Day so Christians can remember to vote. Christians need to become familiar with candidates' positions on support for Israel, religious freedom, and those that align with our American conservative beliefs.
